RE-EXAMINING VALUE OF GIRLS

The girl's name is Drazi. She is 13 years old and lives in a small village in Nepal. Kimbhat is the founder of the group. The Mandala Foundation, which has been working in the area of child marriage in South Asia and globally for the last 10 years, has observed that child marriage is widespread in the area.

The group's mission is to change the mindset of people in the community and to promote the importance of education for girls. They believe that educating girls is the key to breaking the cycle of poverty and child marriage.

The group has been working hard to raise awareness about the negative consequences of child marriage. They have been organizing workshops, seminars, and discussions to educate people about the importance of keeping their daughters in school.

The group has also been working on building alliances with other organizations and government officials to advocate for policies that support the rights of girls.

The group's work has been recognised by the United Nations and other international organizations. They have received several awards for their work and have been invited to speak at conferences and seminars.

The group's work has had a significant impact on the community. Many families have changed their minds about child marriage and are now keeping their daughters in school.

The group's work is ongoing. They continue to work tirelessly to change the mindset of people in the community and to provide opportunities for girls to pursue their education.

The group's work is an example of how small-scale organizations can make a big difference in the lives of girls. Their work shows that when communities come together, they can make a positive change in the world.
